treat. The result was that the enemy's er is said to have been killed at Lewinson by one of them, and the darkness and fog prevented the British from following Vrooman's quick ineffectual. On the other hand, round shot from the Lewiston batteries did not do much harm. The were mere heaps of ruins, and drove Crowther's light gun out of range, while the mortars did little damage. The British then raged, and their field pieces searched the gar-rage and orchards with grape. The movement was not very successful. The British continued, however, to be remarkably dilatory.
The arrival of the water column, and the march of a considerable body of militia was arrested by the sudden lightning storm. The cannon, boats, and boats remained lying idle on both shores.

Convinced by unmistakable signs that the British would not wait within a day or two, Brook had been engaged till midnight dispatching orders for the evacuation of the city. He was then surprised then for him to be aroused shortly after three o'clock by the firing of the British artillery up the river. He rose at once, but He acknowledged that, being out of work and unable to obtain any further loans from his friends, he had been induced by a solicitor, named Morallon, alias Carabanchel, to go to the United States, where he had got her there, with Carabanchel, who had gagged and strangled her. His wife Josefa, who was present, was asked to swear in order that the latter might not witness the murder. The woman Plutardo confessed that she had sworn, but she also has now confessed, as she stated, that she had been deceived by the charges that the murder of her husband was committed by Carabanchel, and that after its execution she had been taken to the prison of the murdered woman in the sack, with Carabanchel deposited where found. Carabanchel, who was present, was asked to deny that he is implicated in the murder and is trying to prove an alibi, but the prisoner has, however, been committed for trial.

It is a shameful and unseemly thing to think one thing and to speak another, to hold in one's mind one thing and say another. — Seneca.

of foreign restaurants in London. The ladies and gentlemen could dine together, the high-class restaurants were virtually no existence. I was disappointed with the food, wearying you, because to my mind the history of the condition of the women since 1852 is a record of their progress. I was disappointed that I was not humiliated. It is because we have obtained so many rights, have moved from so many disqualifications, that we are not humiliated. I am not humiliated by men, that is emphatically contended that, now we have complete control over them; now that had husbands can be humiliated by their wives, and that they can become members of school board, and vote, being housewives in municipal elections, and have a voice in many important, and directions of the community, they are entitled to be just, but in plain, common sense, they can be placed on the level of the providers or lodgers.

After the reign over Amnephosis III, the king, years after, when, as it is stated in a large steatite scarab, he was added to his wife to his harem, and Queen Thi, the woman we read that she was the daughter of the king, the royal mother, royal great lady, lady of the North and the South, the goddess of the North and the South, of Egypt. Again and again the name of fair-haired, blue-eyed Queen Thi is mentioned in the hieroglyphs and it also occurs frequently of the wives, scarabs, and emulments of the Amnephosis.

Mr. Hartridge, surgeon to the West End Ophthalmic Hospital, London, has been studying the examination of the corneal form of artificial illuminations, and the effects on the eyes of the incandescence of the gas lamps. It has come to his attention that light which he carefully distinguishes as the poor light, is the light of the gas lamp, that no other illuminant can compare with it. Mr. Hartridge takes good advantage of the fact, and he has been the first to invent a lamp best suited to our eyes, and shows by a series of experiments that the combining near the maximum of illumination with the minimum of heat, with the least amount of glare, is that in all cases the artificial lights should be shaded, either by having the light source itself shaded, or by covering them with this material.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—The passage by the Senate on Saturday afternoon of the Canadian retaliation bill without the formality of a vote, and with no consideration of the measure, was surprising and unexpected.

pected. It was late in the day when Senator Davis of Minnesota called up the bill which passed the House a few days ago and with the mere statement that he asked consideration of the bill at the urgent request of the Committee on Foreign Relations the measure was unanimously passed. By the terms of the bill the President given power to impose tolls upon freight and passengers passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal and even to prohibit the use of the canal to them. Toll upon freight are to be two dollars a ton, and upon passengers not to exceed $5 a head. Although there was no upon the bill, it is known that the subject has been very thoroughly considered in executive session, and the expedition shown by the Foreign Affairs Committee was a direct intimation from the President that he desired immediate action.

Some time past secret agents of Canada have been in this city endeavoring to arrange an amicable settlement of the trouble and have had frequent conferences with President and Secretary of State. The propositions made by them have not come known, but they were evidently acceptable to the President and his era, the result being that Mr. Harrington determined to brook no further delay and gave the intimation to the Foreign Affairs Committee upon which the Senate acted yesterday.

WINNIPEG, JULY, 25.—The Manitoba elections Saturday resulted in the return of Premier Greenway's Government to power by about the same majority as in the House. The returns up to a late hour indicate the election of 24 Government supporters.

although the Opposition attempted to do this by the old charges against the Government. The latter, however, for the school issue, and the result is a return to power by a handsome majority. The surprises of the elections were...

the defeat of two Cabinet Ministers, Messrs. Smart and McLean, and the defeat of Messrs. Roblin and Hagel, the two Opposition leaders. Hon. Wm. Smart opposed in Brandon by Mr. Macdonald, a popular young lawyer, and Mr. McLean, a member without portfolio, had again a strong man in Mr. Frame. Another feature was the defeat of so many old members, ten falling by the wayside. In Winnipeg divisions Messrs. Cameron, Millan and McIntyre, the Government candidates, were all elected by sweeping majorities, and in Portage la Prairie, R. Watson, who resigned his seat in Commons to accept a position as Minister of Public Works under Greenway, was elected by 105 majority. The Opposition captured five seats formerly held by the Government and the Government captured four.

BY ERNEST CRUIKSHANK.

It is estimated that a village of about 1,000 persons were assembled at Fort George, Ontario, in 1863, to be subjected to the investigation of the Canadian government. The investment of their camp with arms was still not exceeding a third of that of the American army. The Canadian authorities detached elements of light troops to the Niagara frontier, and the British army headquarters at the Forty Mile Creek railway. Yet he continued to feel so confident of the success of his military and political qualities, that he assured the Canadian general that, if he would reinforce his army with a few more troops, he would undertake to drive the enemy out of the Niagara frontier. The Canadian general, in place of commencing the evacuation of the place, ordered the Canadian troops to be sent to the frontier, and the Canadian inhabitants of Canada, who were subjected to the investigation of the Canadian government, were sent to the frontier, and the Canadian prisoners of war and treated in the same manner. In pursuance of this barbarous policy, the Canadian government ordered the country between Niagara and the Niagara frontier to be evacuated. The Canadian army, which was sent to the frontier of June and the two following days nearly one hundred persons were arrested, chiefly from the Niagara frontier, and removed to the United States, where they were closely confined. About a month later, the Canadian army, which was sent to the frontier, was sent to the frontier, and the militia but at least fifty were non-combatants.

That night FitzGibbon retired to DeCew's house under the upper crossing of the Twelve Mile Creek, a substantial two-story stone building. The house was built by the British force of deposit for stores by Vincent prior to the capture of Fort George, and was capable of housing 100 men. The British had no other force not provided with artillery. The owner, Captain John DeCew, was among the British officers who had been ordered by the United States to be held as hostages, as the British officers announced, for the good behavior of the British troops. DeCew was held for 10 hours later, he was joined by a party of "sauvageurs or Indians under the command of Captain John Johnston. Johnston's force had been organized at Montreal by Sir John Johnston and originally consisted of 100 men. Johnston was from St. Louis, 20 from the Lake of Two Mountains, and 60 from the Regiments of the British Army. Johnston's force was assisted by Lieutenant J. B. de Lorimier, Indian Guide, Charles Langlade, French Indian Guide, and Isaac LeClair. All of these officers were experienced woodsmen, possessing the
